Sources for use with Section A.

Source A: A cartoon published in Punch magazine, 22 September 1888. The title, 'Blind Man's Buff', refers to a children's game where one person is blindfolded and tries to catch the others.

Source B: From the East London Advertiser newspaper, 15 September 1888. Here the newspaper is commenting about the actions of Metropolitan Police Commissioner, Sir Charles Warren, during the 'Ripper' murders.

> Sir Charles Warren has made several mistakes that can endanger the community.
>
> He has increased the number of ordinary constables in the police force. However, there are now fewer specially trained detectives; detectives who would have brought a higher intelligence and specialised knowledge to the investigation into the Whitechapel murders.
>
> Also, the men he has added to the police force have a military background and lack any policing experience or local knowledge. The hunt for the Whitechapel murderer has shown that these new men seem to know little about the bad areas in the neighbourhood. They know even less about the bad characters who live there.
